Creating a Community History

Sponsored by
Upstate History Alliance

Stephanie Lehner
coordinator

Documentation of a community's history is vital to the presentation of its story for future generations. Each person, each story, and each business lends itself to the greater story of New York State and beyond. Participants in this workshop will hear from community history leaders to gain the basics they need to develop their own community history projects. They will explore examples of how to engage the community in recording and sharing its history.

This workshop has been developed by Upstate History Alliance, a non-profit service organization that works with museums and historical societies in New York State. It is supported by the Documentary Heritage Program, a statewide program of the New York State Archives, which strives to identify historical records and make them available to the public.
